DAYLILIES for 1954

Daylilies (hemerocallis) are trouble-free perennials of easiest culture. Many daylilies are fragrant and all are unexcelled as cut flowers. Quite hardy throughout the country, thriving in sun or part shade; perhaps the most desirable of all perennials. We will start shipping daylilies about March 15, and advise early ordering to avoid disappointment as some varieties, especially the more recent novelties, may be sold out later in the season. Our strong divisions, set out early this spring should bloom this season and the clumps will grow in beauty year by year. All plants will be correctly labeled and postpaid. Minimum order accepted $2.00. Planting and cultural instructions will accompany all shipments. Daylilies may be transplanted anytime from early spring to late fall. We advise early spring planting if the plants are expected to bloom this season. Many new varieties have been added in this year's list and we have discarded some older kinds that have become outmoded. Check or money order must accompany all orders. No C.O.D. orders accepted.

DAYLILY TERMS, TIME OF SHIPMENT, ETC. We will ship daylilies from the middle of March to about the end of November. The best times for planting are early spring and the fall months. SEPALS - The three outer petals that form the bud. PETALS - The three inner petals, usually broader than the sepals. EYE-ZONE - A dark band of color near the base of the petals. E - early; M - midseason; L - late; R - remontant or reblooming. After the variety name is the originator's name, then the comparative season of bloom; the average height in inches and the price. If interested in more than three plants of a variety, write for special price quotations.

HOW TO USE DAYLILIES

These most versatile perennials may be put to use in many ways. As a foundation planting about the house, they are ideal; used alone or in combination with dwarf evergreens or flowering shrubs. Or try them as a border along a walk or driveway. Used in a mixed border, the early varieties complement various types of iris, and the summer blooming kinds combine well with phlox and provide glorious color at a time when few perennials are in bloom. Daylilies may also be naturalized in large groups, or used as accent plants at a pond, along a stream or at the entrance to a driveway or walk. However you plan to use daylilies, plant lots of them for care-free, summer-long beauty.
